

CLASSICS

This major gives students an understanding of cultures, languages, and literatures of ancient Greece, Rome, and the Mediterranean world. It is a broadly interdisciplinary field focused mainly on ancient Greece and Rome, but students also study the impact of classical cultures on later societies and the interactions among various cultures.

BACHELOR OF ARTS (BA) GENERAL OVERVIEW

Track I: Classical Languages and Literatures

- Language Requirement: Level III of either Greek or Latin; level II of the other language
- Four Greek or Latin language courses at the 300 or 400-level
- Two additional courses in Greek, Latin, or Classics
- Research in Classical Studies

Track II: Classical Humanities

- Language Requirement: Level III of Greek or Latin
- One Breadth Requirement: The Greeks and their Legacies, The Legacy of Rome, etc.
- Four courses in Greek, Latin, or Classics
- Two additional courses in Greek, Latin, or Classics, or approved outside electives
- Research in Classical Studies

Track III: Ancient Civilizations

- The Ancient World
or
The Greeks and their Legacies and The Legacy of Rome
- Five courses in Greek, Latin, or Classics
- Three additional courses in Classics, or approved outside electives
- Research in Classical Studies
- One additional course in a non-Greek and non-Roman classical civilization

ACADEMIC OPPORTUNITIES

Senior Classical League: Members attend socials that help students and faculty get a chance to develop relationships, attend informational meetings on independent research opportunities, participate in excavations and study abroad, and receive information about graduate school.

Douglas Nelson Awards: One or more prizes are awarded to a Classics major for participating in a spring literary contest.

Study Abroad: Don't just learn about Greek and Roman culture in the classroom; immerse yourself in historical studies and contemporary experiences related to your major in Athens and Rome.